occasions in the past. She was out for 13 in her final Test innings.

Jones scored another fifty and Ecclestone registered her maiden one, too. But that only helped England delay the inevitable, and not by much. England was bowled out in the first session of the final day.

Sneh Rana did most of the damage with the ball, claiming four wickets. Fittingly, she took the last wicket too, clean bowling Ecclestone.

The Test may have been one-sided, but there were several fascinating moments over the course of the match. It was another reminder that women deserved more Tests.
