The world remembers Jayden Adams

Jayden Adams featured in all three group-stage matches for South Africa as the nation reached the World Cup knockout stage for the first time. Co-host Canada ended Bafana Bafana's campaign with a 1-0 victory in the Round of 32. Adams remained on the bench for that match.

Just a couple of weeks after returning home from the tournament, however, the midfielder was found dead at his residence. Adams' club, Mamelodi Sundowns, did not announce a cause of death, but news reports claimed it was a death by suicide.

Adams had lost his grandmother days before South Africa's 1-1 draw against Czechia, but the 25-year-old chose to remain with the squad. Following his death, a celebration video from the South Africa dressing room after the team's qualification resurfaced, showing Adams sitting dejected in one corner.

A minute's silence was observed before the final two quarterfinals, England vs Norway and Argentina vs Switzerland, in Adams' memory.

Norway rows its way to best-ever finish

Norway returned to the World Cup for the first time since 1998, spearheaded by its attacking phenoms, Martin Odegaard and Erling Haaland.

As the campaign gathered momentum through the group stage, Norway's fans captured the world's attention with their iconic rowing celebration. Match after match, the faithful turned up at stadiums draped in red, breaking into their trademark routine to spur the team on.

After every victory, the players joined the supporters. Odegaard took charge of the drum, setting the tempo, while the rest followed.

On the pitch, Haaland ensured the fans had every reason to keep rowing. The striker scored seven goals during the tournament to lead Norway to its best-ever World Cup finish, a place in the quarterfinals. Even Brazil, armed with its trademark flair and guided by the experienced Carlo Ancelotti in the dugout, was tamed by the Vikings.
