Bellingham's World Cup was built on arriving when England needed him most. Operating between midfield and attack, he produced seven goals and one assist in eight appearances, finished joint-third in the scoring charts, and drove Thomas Tuchel's side to third place.

He announced himself in the 4-2 win over Croatia, then scored and created Harry Kane's goal against Panama as England secured top spot in its group. His tournament reached another level in the knockout stage. Mexico had not conceded in four matches before Bellingham struck twice within 90 seconds, transforming a round-of-16 tie that England won 3-2.

Against Norway in the quarterfinal, he produced an even greater rescue act. Bellingham equalised in first-half stoppage time and struck again three minutes into extra time, completing a second consecutive knockout brace and carrying England into the semifinals. Argentina ended the title challenge with two late goals, but Bellingham still signed off in fitting fashion.

His stoppage-time run and finish completed a breathless 6-4 win over France in the third-place play-off. The goal made him the first England player to score seven at one World Cup. At 23, Bellingham departed as England's most productive player and the clearest indication that another challenge will follow.
