Haaland arrived at his first World Cup carrying Norway's hopes.

Five appearances later, he had changed what the team believed was possible. His seven goals carried Norway — returning after 28 years — to its first quarterfinal, making it one of the tournament's most compelling stories.

He scored twice in the 4-1 win over Iraq, then added another brace as Norway beat Senegal 3-2 to secure a knockout place. Rested against France, Haaland returned to bundle in an 86th-minute winner against Cote d'Ivoire, Norway's first victory in a World Cup knockout match.

The defining night came against Brazil. Haaland struck both goals in a 2-1 win, the second later voted the best goal of the round of 16. Seven goals from his first 18 attempts underlined the efficiency of his finishing.

England ultimately blunted his threat in the quarterfinal, limiting his service before heat, fatigue and a minor leg problem forced him off in extra time. Norway lost 2-1, but the blank did little to diminish his campaign. Haaland had scored in each of his first four appearances, finished joint-third in the Golden Boot standings, and made Norway's return feel like an arrival.
