USD 500K

US sprint legend and four-time Olympic champion Michael Johnson launched Grand Slam Track (GST) in 2025 with the ambitious goal of transforming athletics. However, the circuit stalled amid financing problems, forcing Johnson to cancel the fourth and final leg in Los Angeles in June. Though GST had filed for bankruptcy protection in December, a legal filing by its creditors in March accused Johnson of "secretly" paying himself USD 500,000 (INR 4.76 crore) days before the season collapsed. A GST representative dismissed the claim at the time as "unfounded and false". Johnson later clarified that the company's credit card had "no room left", so he covered the expense himself, with the understanding that he would be reimbursed. According to Johnson, the USD 500,000 he received was that reimbursement.
