

Standing out: Ranked No. 11 among the heavyweights, Derrick Lewis (R) stands alone in UFC history, his 16 knockout victories a thunderous testament to one of the most prolific finishers the Octagon has ever seen. GETTY IMAGES

Leg kick: A strike delivered with the shin or the top of the foot to an opponent's lower body, specifically the thigh, knee or calf.

Check: Lifting the leg to block an opponent's low kick with the shin. It can hurt both fighters, but it prevents the kicker from landing a clean blow.

Counter-punch: A strike delivered immediately after an opponent attacks, taking advantage of the opening left behind.

Ground and pound: A strategy in which a fighter takes their opponent to the canvas and delivers strikes from a dominant top position.

GRAPPLING AND SUBMISSIONS

Takedown: Forcing an opponent to the ground, usually via a single-leg or double-leg attempt, or from the clinch.

Sprawl: A defensive move in which a fighter throws their legs back and drives their hips down to prevent a takedown attempt.

The guard: A position in which a fighter is on their back but has their legs wrapped around their opponent to control them.

Full mount: A dominant position in which a fighter sits on top of their opponent's torso. This is often the beginning of the end.

Submission: A technique, such as a choke or joint lock, that forces an opponent to tap out to avoid injury or unconsciousness. Common examples include the Rear-Naked Choke and the Armbar.

STATISTICAL SCORING

Significant strikes: All strikes landed at distance, plus any power shots landed in the clinch or on the ground. These are the impactful blows that judges prioritise over minor strikes.

Total strikes: This includes every strike landed, including light shots in the clinch or on the ground that do not necessarily cause damage but keep the opponent active.

Takedown defence (TDD): A percentage representing how many

The Pound-for-Pound (P4P) rankings serve as a subjective leaderboard that ignores the physical boundaries of weight classes.

Because a flyweight will never naturally share the Octagon with a heavyweight, the P4P list acts as a mental equaliser. It asks fans and judges to imagine a world in which every athlete is the same size, shifting the focus entirely towards versatility and the quality of their résumé.

of an opponent's takedown attempts a fighter successfully avoids.

Control time: The cumulative time a fighter spends in a dominant position, whether pressing an opponent against the cage or controlling them on the canvas.

Knockdown (KD): When a strike causes a fighter to fall to the canvas or touch the ground with anything other than their feet.

RESULTS AND SCORING

KO (Knockout): A fighter is rendered unconscious or unable to continue due to a legal strike.

TKO (Technical Knockout): The referee stops the contest because a fighter can no longer intelligently defend themselves.

Unanimous decision: All three judges agree on who won the fight.

Split decision: Two judges score the fight for one fighter, while the third scores it for the opponent.

Majority draw: Two judges score the fight a draw, while one scores it for a specific fighter.
