The main event of UFC 326 in Las Vegas served as a masterclass in strategic adjustment as Charles 'Do Bronx' Oliveira secured a dominant unanimous decision victory over Max Holloway to clinch the BMF title.

While Oliveira is historically celebrated for his finishing ability, this performance showcased a more disciplined version of him.

He effectively neutralised Holloway's volume striking by implementing a wrestling-heavy game plan, recording over 18 minutes of control time in the 25-minute contest.

Holloway displayed remarkable submission defence to survive several rear-naked choke attempts, but he had no answer for Oliveira's positional dominance, which earned the Brazilian a clean 50-45 sweep on all three scorecards and the BMF title.

"Max is the toughest guy I've ever fought," said Oliveira, holding his son tight while his wife stood beside him during the post-fight interview. "I had to come here and dominate."

"I respect you so much. If this division has two BMFs, those BMFs are Charles Oliveira and Max Holloway," Oliveira added, directing his comments toward his opponent.

In the middleweight co-main event, seventh-ranked Caio Borralho secured a dominant unanimous decision victory over No. 8 Reinier de Ridder.

Despite taking an early illegal knee to the groin region in the opening round, Borralho remained composed and dictated the pace of the three-round contest.

By keeping the fight standing and dominating the striking exchanges, he successfully shut down de Ridder's submission-heavy game.

Borralho avoided the mat and picked his opponent apart with superior striking, ensuring the fight stayed exactly where he wanted it.

Borralho convinced all three judges of his superiority, earning a clean 30-27 sweep on the scorecards and further solidifying his contender status.
