espite his lack of trophies during his time with boyhood club Tottenham Hotspur, there is no doubt Harry Kane is a bona fide English football legend. But since making the move southeast to the Bundesliga, he has found an extra gear in his goalscoring.

Kane now leads the race for the European Golden Shoe with 35 goals this season, comfortably ahead of Erling Haaland in second. A second Bundesliga title in two years is already in the bag, as is the German Super Cup. The UEFA Champions League run, however, came to an end in the semifinal stage against defending champion PSG.

Carrying this form into the World Cup, Kane attempts to break another long-standing jinx with the national team. After years of struggling in the abyss, the English national team has developed significantly. Back-to-back World Cup semifinals and back-to-back Euro finals show a team on the cusp, but one that has never quite been able to get across the line.

With the experience of taskmaster Thomas Tuchel at the helm, England will attempt to regain the trophy it last won in 1966, and skipper Kane will be the fulcrum of the campaign. In a team buzzing with young talent, the calm head of the Bayern Munich striker will play a crucial role.

Will Kane finally bring football home? If he does, then the Ballon d'Or could follow the World Cup trophy back to his house, ending another long wait for an Englishman.
