

being crowned the Road to UFC Season 3 winner, she suffered a unanimous decision loss in her promotional debut against Bruna Brasil. Ming boasts lethal striking power, highlighted by a trademark head-kick knockout that put the division on notice. While she lands fewer strikes (3.12 per minute), her defensive shell is tighter (53% defence success), and she actively utilises takedowns (0.81 per 15 minutes) to alter a fight's tempo.

To win, Tomar must employ high-volume striking and combine it with a light-footed approach to disrupt Ming's rhythm. She will also need to tighten her defence to counter clinches from her opponent.

If Tomar allows Ming to dictate the pace or pin her against the cage, she risks being dragged into deep water on the canvas.

The fight week concludes on May 30 with UFC Fight Night 277: Song vs Figueiredo. The main event features a high-stakes bantamweight bout between China's explosive No. 5-ranked Song Yadong and former two-time flyweight champion Deiveson Figueiredo.

In the co-main event, local light heavyweight knockout artist Zhang Mingyang faces veteran Alonzo Menifield. The main card also hosts a pivotal heavyweight clash between No. 3-ranked Sergei Pavlovich and Tallison Teixeira, alongside the highly anticipated bantamweight promotional debut of Kai Asakura against Cameron Smotherman.

Strickland reclaims throne

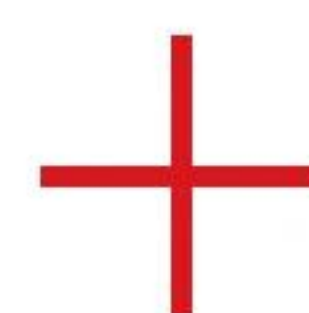

In a major upset at the Prudential Center in New Jersey, Sean Strickland (above) became a two-time middleweight champion by handing Khamzat Chimaev the first loss of his professional career via a gruelling split decision.

The bout began with Chimaev executing his signature frantic pace, dominating the opening round with immediate takedowns and threat-heavy back control. However, Strickland weathered the storm with veteran composure.

From the second round onward,

Strickland shifted the momentum by establishing his trademark Philly Shell defence and taking control of the bout.

As Chimaev slowed down, Strickland stuffed repeated wrestling attempts and out-landed the champion in prolonged striking exchanges. A late surge in the final round sealed the victory for Strickland.

Did you know?

In 2018, Strickland was struck by a car while riding his motorcycle in Los Angeles. He was knocked unconscious, required major knee surgery, and faced a gruelling two-year layoff. Many feared his career was over, but he made a comeback in late 2020 at middleweight, securing five consecutive wins and embarking on the most successful phase of his career.
