England captain Ben Stokes has retired from international cricket at the end of the third Test against New Zealand. One of England's greatest all-rounders, Stokes was in the middle of a spell at Trent Bridge when the England and Wales Cricket Board confirmed that the Test would be the final match of his 15-year international career. In a remarkable twist, Stokes struck with the very next delivery after the announcement was made public, dismissing Zak Foulkes, who edged to second slip. The 35-year-old had missed the second Test after his involvement in an incident at a London nightclub. His international career ended with 122 Tests, 114 one-day internationals and 43 T20s. Stokes is one of the two cricketers with the double of 7000+ runs and 250+ wickets in Test cricket, the other being Jacques Kallis.

All-rounder Shreyanka Patil has been included subject to fitness clearance, after recovering from the ankle ligament injury that ruled her out of the World Cup, while leg-spinner Prema Rawat, her replacement at the tournament, misses out.

Ryan Cook (left) has stepped down as head coach of the Netherlands men's team with immediate effect, citing family reasons following the recent birth of his second child. Batting coach Heino Kuhn will take charge on an interim basis. Cook, who took over in May 2022, oversaw one of the most successful periods in Dutch cricket, guiding the side to qualification for the 2022 and 2024 T20 World Cups. His tenure was highlighted by memorable wins over South Africa and Zimbabwe at the 2022 tournament, helping the Netherlands reach the Super 12 stage.
