

The Albirroja's backline is packed with grit and experience, led by Omar Alderete, who is coming off an impressive debut Premier League season with Sunderland. Further forward, Miguel Almiron, Julio Enciso and Antonio Sanabria all possess the ability to trouble opposition defences.

Rounding out the group is Australia, another familiar face at the World Cup after featuring in each of the last five editions. The Socceroos are led by Tony Popovic, who replaced long-time manager Graham Arnold two matches into the qualifying campaign and guided the side to qualification with relative ease.

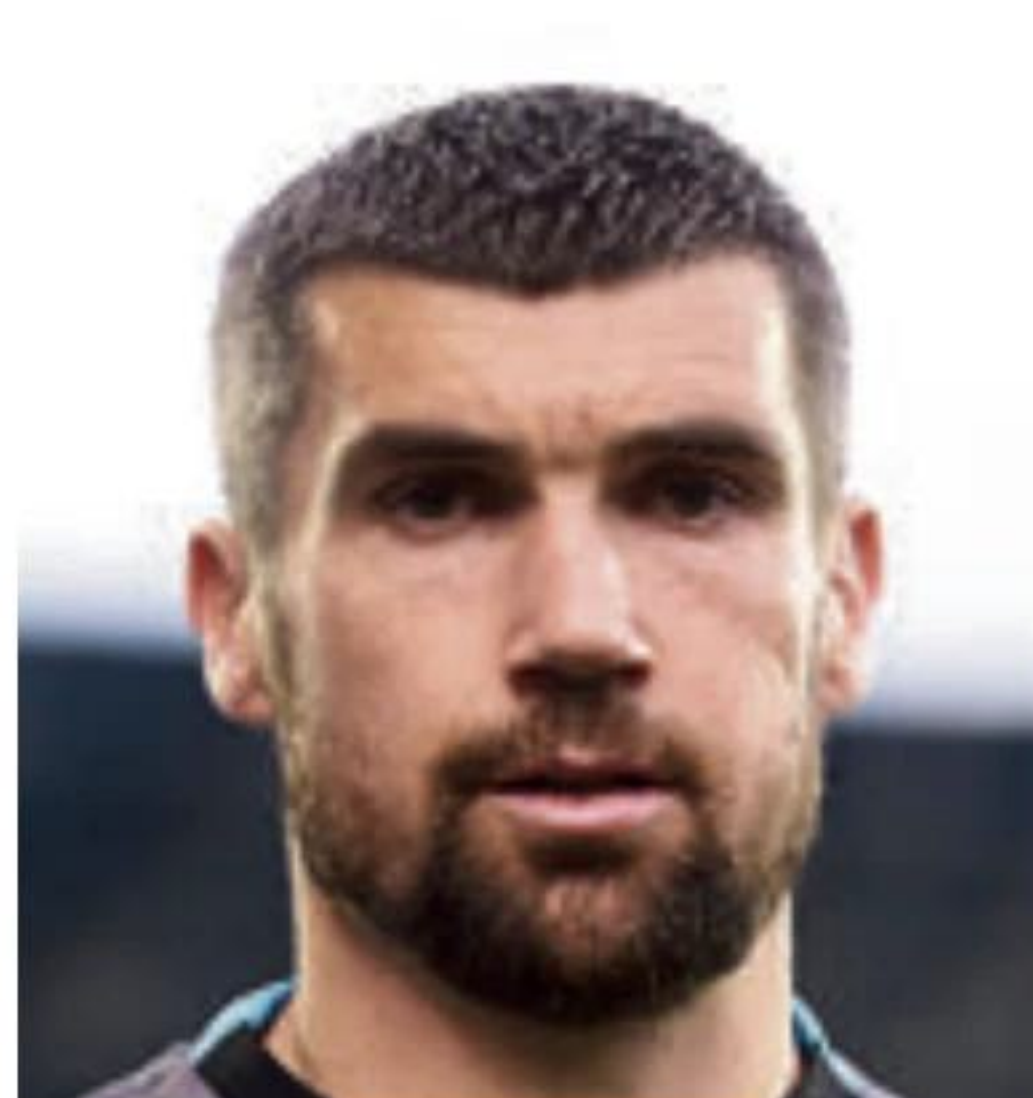

Their hopes, however, have been significantly hampered by injuries. Star attacker Riley McGree has been ruled out of the tournament with an Achilles injury, joining Nicholas D'Agostino, Patrick Yazbek and Lewis Miller on the sidelines.

Popovic must therefore rotate his troops carefully to ensure Australia remains competitive throughout the tournament.

Miguel Almiron (Paraguay)

Premier League fans will remember Miguel Almiron's pace and direct running as key ingredients in the early stages of Newcastle United's resurgence. Now with Atlanta United, he will look to reproduce those performances as Paraguay returns to the World Cup.

Mathew Ryan (Australia)

Australia has been hit hard by injuries ahead of the tournament, making the experience of captain and goalkeeper Mathew Ryan all the more valuable. Ryan, who boasts extensive experience in European football, will be a crucial presence between the posts.
