

brought down inside the box by Cristhian Mosquera — to make it 1-1, a scoreline that remained untouched even as the likes of Kvaratskhelia and Vitinha came agonisingly close to scoring the winner. With nothing to separate the sides even after extra time, the summit clash went to penalties.

PSG was first to take the kicks and Goncalo Ramos duly sent Arsenal goalkeeper David Raya the wrong way. Viktor Gyokeres buried his effort to level the scores before Desire Doue converted to put the French side ahead. Then stepped up Eberechi Eze. His stop-start run-up reeked of uncertainty and, sure enough, he sent it wide to hand PSG the advantage. At that moment, Eze had quite possibly let his boyhood club down. But Raya rose to the occasion and saved Nuno Mendes' effort, allowing the Arsenal faithful to breathe a little easier.

The next four penalties found the back of the net, with Declan Rice (Arsenal), Achraf Hakimi (PSG), Gabriel Martinelli (Arsenal), and Lucas Beraldo (PSG) converting from the spot. The score stood at 4-3 and the Gunners had to score the next one to stay in the game.

The camera momentarily panned to Arsene Wenger, the manager who had led Arsenal to the 2005-06 UCL final, where it lost to Barcelona. The visuals came back to Gabriel Magalhaes, his shoulders heavy with responsibility. Alas, the Brazilian sent his effort over the crossbar to hand PSG a second consecutive Champions League title and Luis Enrique the honour of becoming the fourth manager to win three European crowns. The Spanish tactician joined the likes of Bob Paisley, Zinedine Zidane, and Pep Guardiola.

Barcelona Femeni does the quadruple

Over at the Ullevaal Stadion in Oslo in the UEFA Women's Champions League final, Barcelona (above) handed Lyon — the most successful team in the competition's history with eight titles — a 4-0 thrashing to lift its fourth crown. In the process, Barca Femeni completed the quadruple.

struck second-half braces to give the Catalans their fourth European title in six seasons, underlining their dominance on the continent.

While the Culers were celebrating this historic quadruple, news broke a few days after the Champions League final that club captain Alexia Putellas would be leaving Barcelona at the end of the season, calling time on a storied 14-year career with the Spanish giant.

Ronaldo's wait ends

Cristiano Ronaldo (right, centre) finally lifted a major trophy at Al Nassr after the Portuguese forward bagged a brace in the side's 4-1 win over Damac on the final matchday, a victory that confirmed Nassr's 11th Saudi Pro League title.

It was the club's first league title since 2018-19, with Portuguese coach Jorge Jesus orchestrating the successful campaign. However, immediately after leading the team to glory, the coach announced that the match against Damac was his last in charge of Al Nassr.
