The latest Premier League matchweek had most of the spotlight on Manchester City's home match against Liverpool, but it was not just any other clash. It was Pep Guardiola's (left) 1,000th match in his managerial career. And while his former rival Jurgen Klopp had sent a personal video message congratulating the Spaniard on the milestone, on the pitch he faced Klopp's successor, Arne Slot, beside him on the touchline.

In the end, the Men in Blue ensured Guardiola's historic night was not spoilt, sealing a 3-0 win over their rival. Erling Haaland (above), Nico Gonzalez and a brilliant finish by Jeremy Doku delivered all three points to Man City.

Man City's win became even more important in the context of the title race because Arsenal ended up dropping points against Sunderland after a 2-2 draw. With goals from Bukayo Saka and Leandro Trossard keeping the Gunners ahead until late in the match, Brian Brobbey lit up the Stadium of Light with an equaliser in the fourth minute of second-half stoppage time.

Manchester United's 2-2 draw against Tottenham Hotspur turned out to be a thriller in its own right. Bryan Mbeumo's goal kept the Red Devils ahead for most of the match, but Mathys Tel (81) and Richarlison (90+1) scored two late goals, sending the home crowd into raptures as they seemed certain of three points. But Matthijs de Ligt had the last laugh,
