All eyes were on London ahead of the Premier League's latest matchday as heavyweights Arsenal and Chelsea clashed at the latter's home ground, Stamford Bridge.

Considering Arsenal's enviable form in the Premier League, which has made the Gunners the title favourites, Mikel Arteta's side was considered the favourite ahead of the high-profile clash. And when Moises Caicedo was shown a red card in the 38th minute for a crunching tackle on Mikel Merino, the scales tipped further in Arsenal's favour.

However, it was Chelsea that elated the home fans right after half-time when Trevoh Chalobah's header broke the deadlock after captain Reece James sent in a sumptuous cross into the box. But holding the Gunners with 10 men was always going to be a challenge for Chelsea, and it finally conceded in the 59th minute after Bukayo Saka set up Merino for the equaliser.
