The 138th edition of Wimbledon is scheduled to be held from June 30 to July 13 at the All England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club (AELTC) in London, England.

The grass Major is the third Slam of the year. Having been held since 1877, it is the oldest tennis tournament in the world.

In men's singles, all eyes will be on two-time defending champion Carlos Alcaraz (left). The Spaniard will arrive at the AELTC after beating World No. 1 Jannik Sinner in the longest-ever French Open final, which lasted five hours 29 minutes. Serbia's Novak Djokovic, who hasn't won a Slam since the US Open in 2023, will look to match Roger Federer's all-time men's record of eight Wimbledon titles in the Open Era (since 1968). Czechia's Barbora Krejckova (right) will try to be the first woman since the USA's Serena Williams (2015-16) to defend her crown at Wimbledon. However, World No. 2 Coco Gauff, who beat World No. 1 Aryna Sabalenka in this year's Roland Garros final, will be the overwhelming title favourite.

Last year, Alcaraz had met Djokovic in the men's final for the second straight year. However, unlike the 2023 edition, which went to a deciding set, Alcaraz brushed aside Djokovic 6-2, 6-2, 7-6(4) to clinch his second Wimbledon and overall fourth Major title. In women's singles, Krejckova took down Italy's Jasmine Paolini 6-2, 2-6, 6-4 to claim her maiden Wimbledon title and overall second Major after her French Open 2021 triumph. In Krejckova, Wimbledon got a new women's champion for the seventh edition in a row.

The Finnish-British pair of Harri Heliövaara and Henry Patten won the men's doubles crown, while Czechia's Katerina Siniakova and the USA's Taylor Townsend emerged victorious in women's doubles.

Jan Zielinski of Poland and Hsieh Su-wei of Chinese Taipei clinched the mixed doubles title.

A new era

For the first time at Wimbledon, line judges will be replaced with electronic line-calling. The system is already in place at tournaments worldwide.
