The pitch was chaos — sharp lift, late seam, bursts of spin, and bowlers breathing fire. Wickets tumbled, bodies took blows, and no one crossed 70. Yet Kohli stood apart, untouched by the storm. While others battled the pitch, he bent it to his will. However, Aussies prevailed by 146 runs. GETTY IMAGES

India's hopes fizzled, the series lost, and no one else crossed 46. Its second innings mustered just 151. But for 379 minutes, Kohli made you believe. Every stroke carried intent, every moment felt alive. He dragged India close, but AB de Villiers, with ice in his veins, slammed the door shut. One genius was simply outdone by another as South Africa won by 135 runs. REUTERS

Kohli walked into Edgbaston to jeers, faced a relentless James Anderson spell, survived on 21 — and then rose. He fought, adjusted, then dazzled. With no support, he dragged India close, falling last for 149. That hundred silenced critics, humbled Anderson, and dethroned Steve Smith at the top of the ICC rankings at the time.
