

He knows it's not an easy task, but Qureshi isn't one to shy away from challenges. "Obviously, it has to start from the juniors. We have some really talented boys and girls at the U-12, U-14 and U-16 levels, and we are focusing on them a lot. We have to make the Davis Cup team a little bit stronger," Qureshi tells Sportstar.

He is also keen to ensure that the players are well taken care of and there aren't any financial restraints. "I've been in touch with the ITF and ATP so that we can host Futures and Challenger tournaments here, as they would be a game-changer for the sport in our country," he says. "India has already hosted ATP 250 events in Pune and Mumbai and several other tournaments, which actually gives everyone a road map to start thinking big. So, my aim is to create that road map and Experience is wisdom: Having done the hard yards for years, Qureshi knows what challenges a young player faces while pursuing the sport. With that in mind, he wants to support the players to the hilt and produce a Grand Slam champion.

GETTY IMAGES

have those kinds of tournaments here..."

During his playing days, Qureshi also realised that getting wildcard entries in overseas tournaments could often be challenging. That's why he has signed MOUs with the tennis federations of Tunisia, Kazakhstan and Sri Lanka, among others, so that things become relatively easier for players from Pakistan. "In my singles career, I never got a wildcard entry. Generally, a player gets wildcard entries through the federation, but in

