What does it take to cruise a car to victory? A good engine, reliable tyres and a dependable cooling system — perhaps. But most importantly, it needs efficient fuel and a proven driver.

Paris Saint-Germain (PSG) implemented the theory with precision on a Saturday night when it obliterated Inter Milan 5-0 to win its maiden UEFA Champions League (UCL). That too, without the on-paper formidable trio of Neymar, Lionel Messi and its record goalscorer Kylian Mbappe.

Inter's former full-back Achraf Hakimi (right) opened the scoring and Desire Doue netted a brace, as the French league champion secured the biggest-ever win in a UCL final — all of it under the treble-winning Spanish wizard named Luis Enrique.

But before Enrique, PSG followed a slightly different script.
