At a time when rising run rates have forced bowlers to dig deep into their bag of tricks, the 2025 Indian Premier League has served a timely reminder: the yorker, when executed well, remains the most brutal weapon in a fast bowler's arsenal.

It's a high-stakes delivery. Miss the mark, and it turns into a slot ball or a full toss — both invitations to carnage. Delhi Capitals' Mitchell Starc learned this the hard way against Gujarat Titans. Jos Buttler pounced on wayward attempts, hitting five boundaries in a row and chasing down 204. Yet despite the margin for error, bowlers have trusted the yorker — and reaped the rewards.

Just three days before Buttler tore into him, Starc had nailed five out of six yorkers at the death against Rajasthan Royals, conceding just 10 runs to Dhruv Jurel and Shimron Hetmyer and dragging the match into a Super Over.

"If I can execute more often than not, it's going to be okay. You could play that (20th) over 10 times and get 10 different outcomes. A bit of luck goes a long way," Starc said after the match. "Fortunately, I executed well enough to
