Avesh Khan leads the yorker charts. In 10 matches for Lucknow Super Giants, he's landed 24 yorkers and conceded just 19 runs.

Chennai Super Kings' Matheesha Pathirana has hit the same count but given away 26 runs. Both have claimed two wickets apiece from the delivery.

Avesh showcased textbook death bowling to defend nine runs off the final over against Rajasthan Royals.

Earlier this season, he'd been clobbered by Hardik Pandya for a six off a full toss with 22 needed from the final over. But he stuck to his guns, followed up with near-perfect block-hole deliveries, and LSG conceded just three runs off the last five balls to win by 12.

"I always think the yorker is my best ball," Avesh said after his match-winning spell. "I try to bowl it in any situation. In the IPL, it's important to back yourself. I focus on execution, and once I take the ball, I don't get tense. Whatever I decide to bowl, I commit to it fully."

Crucially, yorkers have worked even at the death — overs 16 to 20 — when batters tend to unleash. This year, 15 wickets have fallen to yorkers in this phase, already matching last year's tally.

The economy rate has dipped from 8.15 to 6.79. Dot-ball rates (38.1% from 33.9%) have improved significantly and boundary rates (9.76% from 14.67%) have come down.

Royal Challengers Bengaluru's Josh Hazlewood and Bhuvneshwar Kumar applied a chokehold on Punjab Kings in New Chandigarh, conceding just 28 runs in the final four overs. Andre Russell and Vaibhav Arora did something similar against the same opposition, giving away 27 in the last three overs.
