

Sri Lanka will host Bangladesh for two Tests and three ODIs and T20Is each from mid-June. The ODI matches will be played as day/night games, while the T20Is will be held under lights. Bangladesh last toured Sri Lanka for a Test series in April 2021, when it lost one match and drew the other. Its last ODI series in Sri Lanka was in July 2019, which it lost 3-0. However, it won its last bilateral T20I series in the country 2-0 in 2018.

Former New Zealand pacer Tim Southee is reportedly being considered by England for the fast-bowling consultant's role ahead of a home summer that includes a five-Test series against India. The 36-year-old is one of the contenders to replace James Anderson, who took up the role last year but is now unavailable due to commitments with Lancashire. Former New Zealand spinner Jeetan Patel remains part of England's coaching staff, serving as spin bowling coach under head coach Brendon McCullum.

Cricket Kenya is set to launch its franchise-based league, the CKT20, in September to revive the sport. The country had enjoyed notable success in the past, including a semifinal appearance in the 2003 ODI World Cup. The inaugural season of the league will be a 25-day tournament contested by six franchises, each allowed to sign at least five international players. However, only four overseas players may be included in the playing XI, with the remaining spots to be filled by local cricketers.

Zimbabwe has named a 15-member squad for the historic Test against England, the country's first red-ball match on English soil since 2003. The four-day fixture will see the return of star all-rounder Sikandar Raza (in pic), who missed the recently concluded two-Test series against Bangladesh. Three changes have been made to the squad that toured Bangladesh. The same squad will also face South Africa at Arundel from June 3-6, as the Proteas prepare for the World Test Championship final against Australia, scheduled to be held at Lord's later that month.
