

Saint-Germain (PSG) edged out Arsenal through a goal from Ousmane Dembele. But it was Gianluigi Donnarumma who stood firm, making five saves — the most by a PSG goalkeeper in a UCL knockout game without conceding a goal since 2003–04. This was also the second time in his career that he made five or more saves and kept a clean sheet in a UCL game, the first being against Manchester City in 2021. With only a goal separating the Gunners and the French champion, and Barca and Inter level on aggregate, the return legs are poised to be blockbusters again — with PSG manager Luis Enrique likely eyeing a reunion against his former side, Barcelona, in Munich.

In the Europa League, Manchester United delivered a commanding 3-0 win in the first leg against 10-man Athletic Bilbao in Spain. Casemiro opened the scoring and captain Bruno Fernandes scored twice, including a penalty, helping the Red Devils keep one foot in what will be their third Europa League final in eight years. In the other semifinal, Tottenham Hotspur beat Bodo/Glimt 3-1 in the first leg, with Brennan Johnson, James Maddison and Dominic Solanke getting on the scoresheet for the English side.

Tottenham was one of the teams in the first all-English Europa League (then called UEFA Cup) final in 1972. If the winners of the first leg maintain their leads, a Spurs versus United final would be only the third such instance in the tournament's history.

In the Europa Conference League, United loanee Antony took centre stage, winning a battle against his former teammate David De Gea, who now plies his trade for Fiorentina. The Brazilian struck with his weaker right foot in the 64th minute in a 2-1 win, taking his goal contributions to 10 — as many as he managed in 72 matches for the Red Devils. “I have trained 1,000 times with Antony and he has never scored a goal with his right foot,” De Gea said after the match. Chelsea, meanwhile, thrashed Djurgarden 4-1, inching closer to its first European final since 2021.
