WHEN WE WORK WITH OUR BOWLERS, WE ALSO TRY TO GET THEM TO MAKE PEACE WITH CONCEDED 10 RUNS AN OVER. THAT FRAMING IS IMPORTANT. YOU MIGHT FEEL YOU'VE BEEN EXPENSIVE, BUT IN THE CONTEXT OF THE GAME, YOU MAY HAVE DONE YOUR JOB

contribute with the bat as well. Do you prioritise that when assessing players?

Oh, definitely. At the auction table and when we're scouting, if two bowlers are similar in skill set, we take the better batter and fielder. You've got to be very good if you're only good at one thing. Most teams, when they're recruiting, want multi-faceted players who can bring options to a side.

You saw this at the auction. The value of a player rises when they are strong in all three departments. The more you can do, the better off you are and the more likely you are to get picked.

What was the auction experience like, especially given the reliance on domestic coaches for information?

I decided to put in time before the auction to see some of the talent here. I went with the coaching staff to watch matches in the senior T20 competition that was on at the time. We then held trials where over 100 players turned out.

That gave me a good sense of what was out there. But yes, I do rely a lot on domestic coaches, just as they rely on me when it comes to some internationals, like picking up Millie Illingworth and Nicola Carey, for example. They trust me, and I need to trust them.

What is Harmanpreet Kaur like to work with, and how does that relationship evolve?

Harman is an interesting one. I've coached against her a lot, and we didn't know each other at all. So, the time so far has been about conversations and building connections. It's great for a coach to have a leader who does everything she can to win. She has changed over the years in how she approaches that responsibility and how she works with players.
