

80 } The number of sixes off the bat of Smriti Mandhana for India in her T20 international career. This is now the maximum hit by an Indian female batter in this format. During her 80 on 28 December 2025, she achieved this tally when she hit her third six of the innings, which took her one more than Harmanpreet Kaur's career tally. Overall, now only three other female batters have hit more sixes than Smriti – West Indies' Deandra Dottin (129), New Zealander Sophie Devine (114), and Sri Lankan Chamari Atapattu (95). Harmanpreet (79) and Shafali Verma (69) occupy the fifth and sixth positions among six hitters.

152 } The number of wickets India's off-spinning all-rounder Deepti Sharma has taken in her T20I career. This is the most by any bowler in women's T20Is so far. She is the first Indian and the ninth overall to become the leading wicket-taker in this format. She did it in the final T20I match against Sri Lanka. Several bowlers in the list below have held this distinction multiple times, including Australia's Lisa Sthalekar and West Indies' Anisa Mohammed (five times each). Pakistan's Nida Dar and Australian Megan Schutt have both led the list twice. The record for leading wicket-taker in women's T20 internationals has changed hands as bowlers surpassed each other's tallies. The list below shows this progression.
