

outing at Silverstone. What did that experience teach you?

Doing my first FP1 at Silverstone, at home, was very special, especially with my family there. I do not think people fully appreciate the step up, even though F2 is the final rung before Formula One. The difference is massive. Everything happens on another level, almost at twice the speed.

It was an incredible experience, and also very special to share the garage with Max (Verstappen).

You ended your F2 season with a win in Abu Dhabi, but it was a campaign of mixed results. How do you assess it now?

To be honest, I am not very happy with my F2 season. There were some good moments, but there were also too many difficult days. I learnt a lot throughout the year, especially about myself.

It is hard to pinpoint things from F2 that directly translate to Formula One. It was not an easy year. As you said, it had a bit of everything. It was not always enjoyable at the time, but that is often when you learn the most.

Formula One is longer, tougher and more demanding. How are you preparing for that step?

It is going to be very different from what I am used to, in every sense. The season is longer and much more physically and mentally demanding.

Common ground: Arvid Lindblad joins five other drivers with British nationality on the grid this year - Ferrari's Lewis Hamilton, McLaren's Lando Norris, Mercedes' George Russell, Oliver Bearman of Haas and Williams driver Alex Albon, who races under the Thai flag but was born and raised in Britain.

The life of an F1 driver is also far busier. There are many things I need to get up to speed with, even the basic aspects.

On top of that, the sport itself is changing significantly next year. In many ways, it will feel like starting from scratch for everyone. That is not easy, but it is also an opportunity.

I will be starting from zero, and I am really looking forward to it.

Will you find time to visit India again?

I am not sure about during the season itself, but I will be coming for the Red Bull Moto Jam. I am really looking forward to it. Driving a Formula One car in Delhi and doing my first show run as an F1 driver in India will be very special.

First app you open in the morning?

Instagram.

One skill you would borrow from another driver?

The car control of some rally drivers. I would love to be able to drift a rally car the way they can.

Your walkout song?

I do not really have one, but my current hype song is No Love by Eminem.

Biggest non-sporting dream?

I have not really thought about it. I have not spent much time at home, so I would like to make more of an effort to spend time with my family, especially my brother.
