

highlighted his adaptability and potential.

Franco Colapinto and Jack Doohan, limited to a partial campaign with Alpine, faced the steepest challenges of all. Doohan was shown the door early, while his successor, a familiar fill-in on the grid, had no real standout drives. The Argentinian, gaining invaluable knowledge despite scarce chances to score, has been handed another golden opportunity in 2026 to establish himself.

The 2025 season was an opportunity to make their mark, each with a unique journey, but all enduring the same baptism of fire. Every weekend offered glimpses of how F1's future could look in the coming years, laying the foundations of what may become long, successful careers.

ISACK HADJAR (Racing Bulls)

12th place — 51 points

One podium — Netherlands (3rd)

Reached Q3 16/24 times

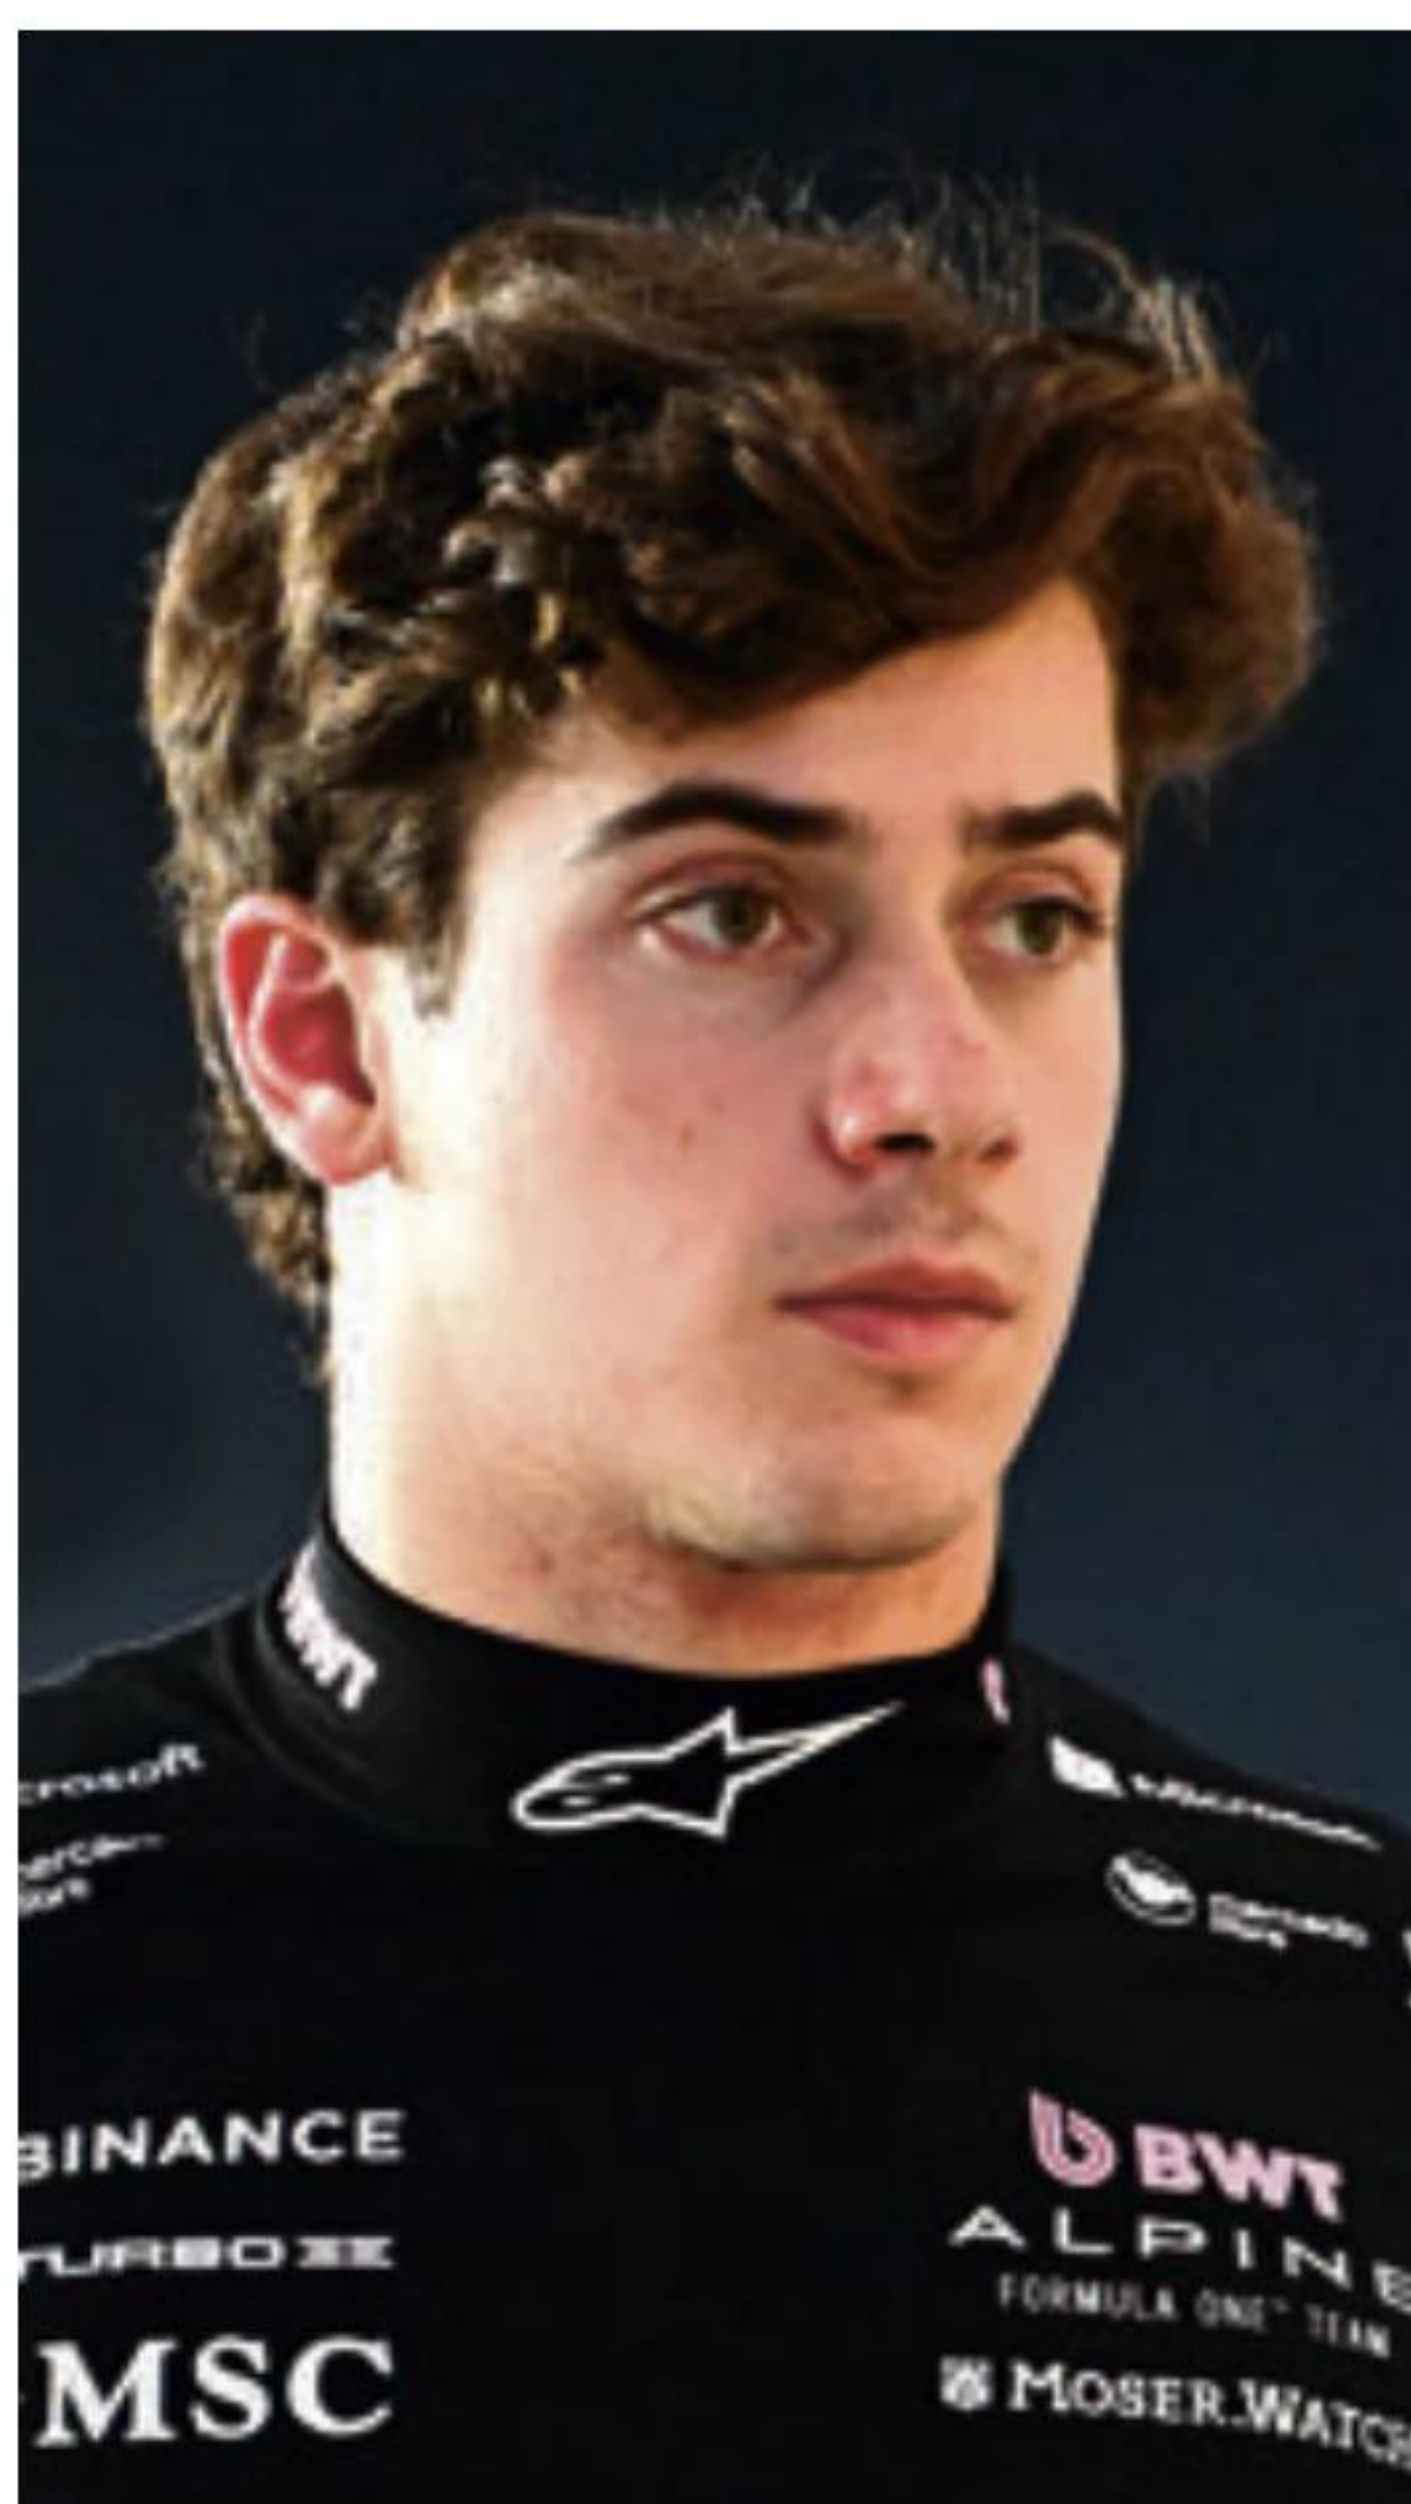

GABRIEL BORTOLETO (Sauber)

19th place — 19 points

Best finish — 6th (Hungary)

Reached Q3 5/24 times

FRANCO COLAPINTO (Alpine)

20th place — 0 points (18 races)

Reached Q3 0/24 times

JACK DOOHAN (Alpine)

21st place — 0 points (6 races)

Reached Q3 0/24 times