Liverpool has been in the news throughout this season — initially because of the Alexander Isak transfer saga and now due to the disappointment of Mohamed Salah, who claimed he was being thrown under the bus by the club.

However, manager Arne Slot soon doused the tension by allowing Salah (right) onto the field, and he delivered, assisting in a 2-0 win over Brighton. With it, he set the record for most goal involvements for a single Premier League club — 277 — surpassing Wayne Rooney's 276 for Manchester United.

Meanwhile, United beat Wolverhampton Wanderers and Crystal Palace, remaining three points adrift of a Champions League spot. Moreover, Bruno Fernandes (57) surpassed Paul Scholes (55) on the list for most Premier League assists for the club.

League leader Arsenal, stunned by third-placed Aston Villa, returned to winning ways, also against Wolves. Its relentless form has kept it atop the table in both the Premier League and the Champions League.

Manchester City — placed second — continues to try to climb back up, with Erling Haaland predictably leading the Golden Boot race with 17 goals, while fourth-placed Chelsea looks to have found its rhythm again with a 2-0 win over Everton after a barren run of four matches comprising two draws and as many losses in all competitions.
