

Damage over drama

UFC 324 was decided by accumulation, not moments, with Justin Gaethje outlasting Paddy Pimblett and restoring order at lightweight.

UFC (Ultimate Fighting Championship) 324 was about solidifying legacies and rankings.

The atmosphere in Las Vegas was electric, with the card designed to bridge the gap between the established legends of the Octagon and a surging new generation of talent.

At the centre of this competitive crossroads was a main event for the interim lightweight title, pitting the unrelenting power of Justin Gaethje against the momentum of Paddy “The Baddy” Pimblett.

The headliner surpassed even the loftiest expectations, evolving into a twenty-five-minute war. Gaethje, known as “The Highlight” for his career-long penchant for creative finishes, showcased a more refined but equally dangerous version of himself.

He pressured Pimblett from the outset, utilising heavy leg kicks, before capping the opening frame with a devastating uppercut that floored the Scouser.

The narrative of the night, however, became Pimblett’s sheer refusal to give up.
