Real Madrid zooms ahead

In another top-of-the-table clash in European football, Real Madrid humbled surprise title contender Girona 4-0 to take a five-point lead atop La Liga.

The Los Blancos were powered by a brace from star midfielder Jude Bellingham (in pic), whose goals were sandwiched by strikes from Vinicius Jr. and Rodrygo.

Brazilian winger Vinicius put in a scintillating shift, finding the opener with a rasping shot from outside the box and then setting up Bellingham with a magical, outside-of-the-boot pass.

PSG's house-hunting

Paris St. Germain is on the lookout for a new home ground after Paris' Deputy Mayor for Sports, Pierre Rabadan, ruled out the possibility of the sale of the Parc des Princes (in pic) to the Ligue 1 side.

"We know what we want, we wasted years to try and buy it. It's easier for us now, we know what we want. It's over for us. We want to move out of the Parc," said club president Nasser Al-Khelaifi.

The Parc des Princes has been home to PSG for nearly fifty years, with the club moving into the ground four years after its formation.

Out of the blue

The International Football Association Board, the global body that sets football's rules, is considering the introduction of the concept of sin-bins, which will be indicated by a blue card.

Sin-bins, a concept popularly used in rugby (in pic) and hockey, will allow the referee to send a player off the ground for a certain period for certain fouls, such as dissent. The blue card will thus be of lesser consequence than a red card, but more than the yellow one.

Sin-bins were introduced in grass-root level football in 2019. The rule, if adopted, will start from the lower level of the sport, on a trial basis.
