

FOR THE LOVE OF THE GAME

Here is a comprehensive list of pet peeves in tennis, spanning from player conduct and dress code issues to broadcasting quirks and organisational setbacks.

Paul Fein

FOR MORE STORIES

We all have our pet peeves. And if you play and watch tennis, you will surely have yours.

Billie Jean King, the ultimate trailblazer, who crusaded to improve our sport since she was 11, has long targeted Wimbledon's strict all-white dress code. "Nothing is worse in sports than when you turn on the television and two players are wearing the same uniform or same outfits," she told CNN last year. "It's horrible. No one knows who's who. I've been yelling for years that this is one of my pet peeves. Have you ever seen any sport where opponents wear the same outfit?"

'Wasted time' tops Patrick McEnroe's list of pet peeves. "In no other sport do players have as much control to determine when they want to start play as in tennis," said ESPN analyst McEnroe, a former world-class competitor, during the 2018 US Open. "Imagine getting ready to start an NFL game, a tee time at the Masters, or a World Cup soccer game, and the player says, 'Hold on! I need to go to the bathroom!'"

Time is of the essence in a sport where 'action time' — when the ball is in play — constitutes only about 15% of the 'total match time'