

FOR MORE STORIES

End of an agonising wait: The Indian team won the ICC 2024 Men's T20 World Cup with a narrow win over South Africa in Barbados on June 29, 2024. K. R. DEEPAK

From T20 glory to Test woes: India's mixed year

Indian cricket in 2024 saw a T20 World Cup triumph but struggles in Tests, including a historic home series loss to New Zealand. Emerging talents shone in T20s, while ODIs and Test transitions promise to pose challenges for 2025.

Dhruva Prasad & Anish Pathiyil

dhruva.prasad@thehindu.co.in, anish.p@thehindu.co.in

The Indian men's cricket team's fortunes ebbed and flowed with the vagaries of different formats in 2024, as Rohit Sharma's men oscillated between the delight of a T20 World Cup win in the Americas and a debilitating Test series defeat against New Zealand at home.

If India laid hands on an International Cricket Council (ICC) trophy after 11 years when it beat South Africa in a nerve-jangling final, it also frittered away a coveted 12-year unbeaten record at home in the longest format by conceding a 0-3 series sweep for the first time in its backyard. Its agony in Tests spilled over on its tour of Australia, where it fell to a 1-2 deficit in the five-match series before relinquishing its hold on the Border-Gavaskar Trophy in the new year for the first time since 2014-15.

The string of losses in Tests, both