

» INTERVIEW

From kickboxing to kabaddi

Ajit Chouhan has led U Mumba's charge, scoring 114 raid points at an average of 8.14 per match with a 63.33 per cent success rate.

Saikat Chakraborty

saikat.chakraborty@thehindu.co.in Pursuing success in sports often hinges on the ability to seize opportunities. In Pro Kabaddi League (PKL) Season 11, numerous young players have exemplified this principle through their performances.

One such player is Ajit Chouhan of U Mumba, whose early-season brilliance has garnered significant attention.

The 19-year-old left-raider has been the standout star of the Mumbai outfit. The team, currently seventh in the points table, is fighting for a playoff spot after missing out for the past three seasons.

The youngster has led Mumba's charge, scoring 114 raid points at an average of 8.14 per match with a 63.33 per cent success rate. He has already notched five Super 10s in 14 matches, accounting for 42 per cent of the team's total raid points.

Swapping sports

For Ajit, kabaddi was initially a way to have fun with his schoolmates. Growing up in the Pune suburb of Thergaon, he began training in kickboxing at the age of five. However, his school friends were more interested in