

Glory, grit and heartbreak

We look at some of the most epic encounters and nail-biting finishes in the Women's World Cup over the years.

Rajdeep Saha and Aditya Padinjat rajdeep.saha@thehindu.co.in, aditya.p@thehindu.co.in

A uckland 1982: New Zealand - 80; India - 37 | NZ won by 43 runs

On January 14, 1982, the Kiwis displayed a masterclass in how to defend the paltriest of scores on the biggest of stages.

Their decision to bat after winning the toss might have been a terrible one in hindsight. Only opener Nicki

Turner managed to cross the 20-run mark, with skipper Trish McKelvey (16*) and Barb Bevege (12) the other players recording double figures.

Indian bowlers made merry on the Cornwall Park wicket, with Diana Edulji picking up three wickets and Lopamudra Bhattacharji and Shubhangi Kulkarni taking two scalps apiece.

Chasing 81, one would have thought it to be an easy win for the Indians. But riding on home support, the Kiwis were powered by Jackie Lord's splendid six-for, conceding just 10 runs in her eight overs.

Rajeshwari Dholakia was the only Indian batter to reach double figures as the visitors' last four willow-wielders were sent back for nought — all falling prey to Lord's masterful spin bowling.

India's innings was wrapped up for just 37 in 35 overs and the Kiwis clinched a 43-run win. To date, New Zealand holds the record for the lowest total successfully defended in the tournament.