

Lone warrior

Antim Panghal redeemed India's disappointing campaign in Zagreb with a solitary bronze medal in the women's 53kg category.

Y. B. Sarangi
sarangi.y@thehindu.co.in Paris Olympics bronze medallist Aman Sehrawat and Worlds bronze medallist Antim Panghal were expected to hit the headlines at this year's World Wrestling Championships in Zagreb. They did so in contrasting ways.

Third-seeded Aman's shocking forfeiture for being overweight in men's 57kg freestyle brought embarrassment to the country. Antim, however, salvaged some pride for the team with a lone bronze medal in women's 53kg.

The Aman episode was reminiscent of the Vinesh Phogat fiasco at the Paris Olympics a year ago. Vinesh, who had stunned World and Olympic champion Yui Susaki on the opening day of her competition on her way to the 50kg final, was overweight and declared ineligible for the title clash on day two. It practically cost India a medal.

While Vinesh ended up on the wrong side of a gamble she took by making a drastic weight cut to compete in 50kg, Aman overshooting the weight limit in his regular category by 1.7kg even before the start of the competition was inexplicable.

Despite claims that Aman was unwell, which prevented him from cutting weight, Wrestling Federation of India (WFI) president Sanjay Singh was unhappy with the development.

"Aman pulled out as he could not reduce his weight enough. He is an experienced wrestler

GETTY IMAGES