

Chelsea, which won its maiden UCL title against Bayern Munich in 2012, was humbled at the Allianz Arena this time, as Harry Kane's brace and Trevoh Chalobah's own goal saw the Bavarians coast to a 3-1 victory.

Premier League

A Merseyside derby and two heavyweight clashes between London and Manchester sides. Late drama, send-offs and fan hostility — the Premier League had an action-packed gameweek.

On paper, Arne Slot's Liverpool was expected to steamroll Everton. However, the Toffees put up a good fight even though it wasn't enough in front of the boisterous Anfield crowd. Liverpool edged a 2-1 win courtesy of goals from Ryan Gravenberch and Hugo Ekitike. Idrissa Gueye pulled one back for Everton, but David Moyes' men could not find an equaliser.

In the 67th minute, Anfield had another reason to cheer as Alexander Isak came off the bench to make his Liverpool debut.

Manchester City's clash with Arsenal once again raised the teacher-vs-student narrative as Mikel Arteta went up against Pep Guardiola. Despite City's Premier League dominance in recent seasons, a poor start to the current campaign meant the Gunners started as favourites, that too in front of home fans.

Therefore, when Erling Haaland opened the scoring, rounding off a brilliant counter-attack, the narrative certainly changed. City almost managed three points away from home but was denied by Gabriel Martinelli, who latched on to a brilliant aerial through ball from Eberechi Eze and then lobbed it over Gianluigi Donnarumma to score the equaliser in the third minute of second-half stoppage time.

Manchester United's home clash against Chelsea was another anticipated fixture. Looking to bounce back from the derby loss to Man City, United had the perfect start after Chelsea keeper Robert Sanchez was sent off in the fifth minute for a rash challenge on Bryan Mbeumo. Soon, the Red Devils capitalised with goals from Bruno Fernandes and Casemiro (both above), but the latter got his team in trouble by earning his second yellow just before half-time and thus received his marching orders. With both teams down to 10 men, the second half was more competitive. Trevoh Chalobah pulled one back for Chelsea in the 80th minute, which led to a nervous end for the United faithful, but their team held on for a 2-1 win. The Old Trafford crowd did not miss the opportunity to make its hostile feelings known towards former player Alejandro Garnacho, who forced a move to Chelsea in the summer transfer window. However, the Argentinian was only on the bench and did not get any minutes against his former side.

Tottenham Hotspur, which has had a good start to the season under Thomas Frank, almost suffered another hiccup against Brighton and Hove Albion, which took a two-goal lead at the break, but the north London side mounted a second-half comeback to earn a 2-2 draw. And the fact that Tottenham's second goal was the result of Jan Paul van Hecke putting the ball into his own net rubbed salt into the wounds of the Brighton fans. At the end of Matchday five, Liverpool tops the table with 15 points, followed by Arsenal, Tottenham and Bournemouth (all on 10 points but separated by goal difference) in second, third and fourth. Chelsea is sixth with eight points. Manchester City and Manchester United are ninth and 11th, both on seven points.

Mbappe continued his fantastic goal-scoring form as he found the net once again in Real Madrid's 2-0 win against Espanyol, with Eder Militao scoring the other goal. The Frenchman, who scored his fifth league goal of the campaign, tops the scoring charts.

Breathing down Mbappe's neck is Barcelona's Ferran Torres, who scored a brace in his team's 3-0 win against Getafe to take his season tally to four. Dani Olmo scored the
