

21 } The number of innings Jamie Smith took to reach 1000 Test runs of his career (in the Lord's Test match) is the fewest by an English wicket-keeper in Test cricket. It is interesting to note that Smith is now the second quickest in terms of innings, for a Test wicket-keeper, with South African Quinton de Kock doing it in 20 innings in January 2017.

Fewest innings to reach 1000 Test runs for a wicketkeeper

211 } The number of catches taken by Joe Root in his career. This is now the most by any Test fielder, going past the previous record of 210 catches held by India's Rahul Dravid. Root achieved this new record when he claimed the catch of Karun Nair on the second day of the Lord's Test match. The last English fielder before Root to hold this Test record was Colin Cowdrey, who led with 120 catches from 1968 to 1984.

4 } The number of players who have the distinction of doing the all-rounder's double of 7000-plus runs and 600-plus wickets during their international career across formats (Tests/ODIs/T20Is). Ravindra Jadeja, in the second innings at Lord's, became the latest to join an elite group of top all-rounders in international cricket. The list below also shows that only Pollock and Jadeja have also 150-plus catches to their credit.

Players with 7000-plus runs and 600-plus wickets in their international cricket career (listed on the basis of the average difference)

All records are correct and updated until 22 July 2025.

Postscript:

* Joe Root's century at Lord's is his 11th against India, thus emulating Aussie Steve Smith's tally. Gary Sobers (WI), Viv Richards (WI) and Ricky Ponting (Aus) follow them with eight Test centuries against India.

* India, after three matches, has so far hit 37 sixes in this series, which is the most by a side in an AWAY series. The previous record of 32 sixes was held by the West Indies (in India in 1974/75 in five Tests) and New Zealand (vs Pakistan in UAE in 2014/15 in three Tests).
