

The upcoming State Sports Academy-cum-International Cricket Stadium will be part of the Rajgir Sports Complex, which aims to support over 25 sports including hockey, football, swimming, kabaddi, volleyball, and wrestling.

Bihar, a land steeped in history and intellectual legacy, is undergoing a quiet but profound transformation. This change is not being driven by its famed educational institutions or political milestones, but by something that has long remained under the radar — sports. With the launch of the Chief Minister's Sports Development Scheme, Bihar is setting a bold new agenda that aims to make the state a national leader in sports infrastructure, talent identification, and athlete welfare.

The initiative is not just about building playgrounds or hosting tournaments. It is a comprehensive mission that touches every aspect of athletic development — from grassroots facilities and residential training academies to scholarships, jobs, and international-standard infrastructure. For a state that has historically lagged behind in sporting achievements, this marks a significant turning point.

At the heart of this transformation is the belief that sports can empower the youth, promote community well-being, and uplift the state's image on both national and international stages.

A New Foundation: Stadiums and Sports Buildings

The backbone of any sports ecosystem is its infrastructure. Recognising this, the state government has launched an unprecedented drive to build modern, accessible sports facilities across all its administrative blocks. Out of Bihar's 534 blocks, 252 already have fully constructed outdoor stadiums. An additional 64 are currently under construction, while 58 are at the active development stage. Proposals for stadiums have been received from 163 more blocks, indicating strong grassroots interest and participation in the program.
