

COMPETING IN INDIA WAS ON MY BUCKET LIST. IT'S THE FASTEST-GROWING JAVELIN COMMUNITY IN THE WORLD RIGHT NOW

What are your goals for the 2025?

I was struggling with a major back injury in 2020 that took quite a long time for me to recover from. Last year, I tried to get back to competitions — it wasn't amazing, but it was OK considering where I was coming from. Since then, I've had a really, really good winter. Unfortunately, during the fall season, there was another break due to a Lyme infection, which really put me down.

But honestly, since January, I've been healthy and training really well. I'm just looking forward to competing again. Training is one thing, and competing is another — and I'm just glad to be back on track soon. I'm taking the long route back to where I was, and I'm starting to eye the World Championships a little. I have strong competitors in my own country, which is good for Germany and for the sport — but at the same time, it's a challenge for me.

Right now, the more important goal is to have a steady season: to compete in at least eight to ten meets and get back to stable distances above 80 metres. If I can do that, then I can take the next steps towards 2028.
