

Batting average and run-rate in all Test series with 6000+ runs

Anderson-Tendulkar Trophy, 2025

Test bowling average in England grounds years. The top-order batters from both sides combined for a remarkable average of 49.37.

"We came into the series knowing we'd encounter flatter tracks and fast scoring. We were mentally prepared for a grind," said India's bowling coach, Morne Morkel.

This English summer also produced 21 individual hundreds — the joint-most in a Test series, equalling Australia's tour of the West Indies in 1955.

Four of those centuries came from Indian captain Shubman Gill, who scored a colossal 754 runs — the most by an Indian skipper in a Test series and second only to Sunil Gavaskar's 774 against the West Indies in 1971 for the most by any Indian in a long-format series.

The run glut was not just about volume. The series run rate of 3.86 was the second-highest for a five-plus-Test series, behind only the 2023 Ashes (3.93).

The freedom with which batters scored was also reflected in the number of sixes struck. England and India combined for 81 maximums — bettered only once, in the 2024 England-India series, which saw 102.

While batters from both sides deserve credit for their execution, their feats were undoubtedly aided by increasingly docile English pitches,