

3} The number of instances in Test cricket where 100+ runs partnerships were recorded for the third wicket after the first two wickets fell without a run on the board. The 188-run stand between K. L. Rahul and Shubman Gill in the second innings in Manchester is the latest such instance and is also the highest stand under these circumstances (see Table 1). The second table below lists the three occasions (India has done it twice) when Test sides managed to reach totals of 400 or more after losing their first two wickets for zero.

5} The number of occasions when a Test captain achieved the rare feat of registering a three-figure score and claiming a five-wicket haul in a Test match. Ben Stokes, in the Manchester Test, became the latest to join this small group of captains in Test cricket history. As a player, Stokes also became the fourth Englishman after Tony Greig, Ian Botham (who did it four times) and Gus Atkinson. Meanwhile, Stokes has become the seventh player to achieve this all-rounder's double against India after West Indians Collie Smith and Garry Sobers, New Zealander Bruce Taylor (on his Test debut), Englishman Ian Botham, Pakistani Imran Khan and West Indian Roston Chase.

3} The number of players with 7000-plus runs and 200-plus wickets in their Test career. Ben Stokes, during his knock of 141 against India in Manchester, when he crossed 7000 Test runs, emulated West Indian Garry Sobers and South African Jacques Kallis. For the record, Sobers (in 80 Tests) reached this double in the fewest number of matches, while Kallis, at 30 years, 201 days, is the youngest.

4} The number of instances in Test cricket where India, after conceding a first innings lead of 300-plus, polished off the deficit to draw the match, which was its second such fightback — at Manchester. In 1936, 89 years ago, India, under almost similar circumstances, managed to save the Test.
