The Prime Volleyball League (PVL) crowned its third champion in three seasons. The Calicut Heroes dominated the league, winning both the regular season and the Super 5s before defeating the Delhi Toofans in the final.

For the PVL itself, the Toofans' presence in the final validated the decision to expand the league and highlighted the success of the model.

Previously, Baseline Ventures, the promoters of PVL, ran a short-lived Pro Volleyball League under the Volleyball Federation of India (VFI). However, the VFI abruptly terminated the contract, leading to a legal battle.

The Madras High Court ruled in favour of Baseline, awarding it compensation. Then, VFI attempted to launch a competing league that ultimately fizzled out.

Baseline has since established independent communication channels with the international governing body, the Federation Internationale de Volleyball (FIVB), and launched the rebranded PVL, allowing it to host the Club World Championships in India last year. This sequence of events clearly demonstrates PVL's dominance in Indian volleyball.

The players have emerged as the biggest winners at the end of this power struggle between PVL and VFI. Previously caught in the crossfire, they were even pressured to choose
