

because in Barbados, you have sunshine 365 days a year. I arrived in the UK, stepped off the plane, and while breathing, this white stuff was coming out of my mouth, which was a shock.

When I got home, my parents had four more children. I was reunited with two brothers and two sisters. My elder sister, Margaret, and I were the ones who came. Adjusting to the weather and the food in England, which was totally different from the Caribbean, was also an issue. In Barbados, cricket was played on every street corner, but in Stevenage, England, a new town, cricket was not high on the agenda for kids. On every street corner, kids were playing football. I had never played football before, so that was
