tournament rules — a maximum of four overseas players — means that every team has to rely on a string of uncapped players to fill their ranks.

Thus, in the IPL, batters have a chance to make merry against bowlers who are not too experienced. In T20 World Cups, no such restrictions are imposed on teams, resulting in better and more potent bowling attacks.

Rule innovations

The spike in run-scoring in the last two editions of the IPL is partly down to the introduction of the 'Impact Player' rule.

The provision of an impact player has allowed teams to press harder with the bat as it provides the safety net of an extra batter in case a collapse ensues up the order.

The Big Bash, too, has had a spate of such tinkering, aiming to provide innovation to the sport.

This included a floating two-over PowerPlay, called Power Surge, and the X-factor substitution, which is a variant of the Impact Player.
