

Invincible: Real Madrid remained unbeaten in this year's UEFA Champions League, scoring 28 goals along the way. This is its sixth title in the last 10 seasons. AFP

AURA OF INEVITABILITY

Real Madrid claimed its 15th European title after goals by Dani Carvajal and Vinicius Jr. ensured a 2-0 victory against Borussia Dortmund in the final.

Joan Mathew Jacob
joan.mathew@thehindu.co.in

Prior to its summit clash against Borussia Dortmund at Wembley Stadium, Real Madrid boasted a perfect record in UEFA Champions League finals, having never been defeated in any of the eight summit clashes it reached since the competition was rebranded from the European Cup in 1992.

But in this year's final, for a good 72 minutes, Dortmund, backed by the travelling Yellow Wall, appeared to be on the verge of loosening Real's grip on its beloved trophy with a dominant display of attacking football.

However, it was Dani Carvajal who first thrust the dagger of inevitability into the hearts of Dortmund fans with his perfectly guided header into the back of the net following a corner.

Minutes later, Brazilian wonderkid Vinicius Jr doubled the lead, ensuring his side would claim a record-extending 15th European title, achieving La Decimoquinta.

Toni Kroos, competing in his final game before the Madridistas, joined Luka Modric, Nacho, Carvajal, and former player Paco Gento as the only players in history to win six European titles.

This victory marked Carlo Ancelotti's fifth UCL title as a manager and his third in two spells with Los Blancos. After crashing out in the semifinal against Manchester