

The key to how methods work with multiple objects is that the first parameter of all methods, `self`, is always set to the object used in a call to that method. With this approach, every method uses the instance variables for the current object.